ABSTRACT

The presented article examines one of the most important and topical features of translation today - the transmission of emotionally colored vocabulary. Translation as such can be viewed as a complex form of communication. Emotionally colored vocabulary, due to the fact that it manifests a person's attitude to a certain subject, expression, national thinking and perception of the world, itself is a rather complex system, which makes the process of its transmission into another language doubly complicated.

Keywords: expression, emotional coloring, metaphor, interpretation, equivalent, connotation.
